

Right to Work Analogy

Say you had to cross a river to get to work in the morning. If there was a bridge and it had a toll booth, everyone who used the bridge would have to pay a toll; otherwise you could use a ferry.

But what if you were told the toll was optional? Of course people would opt not to pay the toll if they could cross the bridge either way. Soon, the bridge would fall into disrepair and collapse, because no one would be paying for its upkeep- which is what the ferry companies wanted in the first place.

So, I remind everyone, if approached to sign a petition legalizing right to work, do you want to take the ferry or the bridge.

Say no thank you I want to protect my pension, wages and benefits.
